

By Riley Aiken

11 years old
5th grade, Cedar Pointe Elementary School

The Adventures of Sir Static!

It was an amazing, cloudless day in Electri City. Sir Static was on his way to the Dryer, which is where he works. He was walking, thinking silently. He had a problem. He was incredibly shy, and he finally wanted to come out of his shell. But the main question was, “how?”

Except for him, every ball of energy around him was happy and excited to start their day. Then, out of nowhere, a burst of lightning shot out of the sky!

Lightning is a form of static electricity. Unlike when you get shocked from pulling your clothes out of the dryer, lightning can kill you if you get struck by it. And, normally lightning is white, blue, red, orange, and yellow. But this strike was purple! Right after the lightning, a shape emerged from the clouds. It was a woman. “Hello Electri-city! My name is Wires Women! And I am here to take over your city!”

Kids started screaming. Adults tried to comfort the kids, but looked like they needed a good comforting themselves. All hope seemed lost. Except for that one hero who stepped up.

Sir Static knew what to do. To understand how, we would have to go back 20 years ago, back to a place where Sir Static was only 6. His Grandpa, Electromagnet Edward, liked to tell him stories. One was about a mythical creature called Wires Women. She was a fortune teller, until she realized that she could tell her own fortune. She saw what she was going to become one day and decided to start being evil a couple of years early.

Because he heard the story hundreds of times, he also knew how she was defeated. She could only be stopped by one of the Statics. He had to get super staticky then run up to her and poke her left arm.

He was the only one who could stop her. He had to do it. He ran around the corner to the Dryer and got in. He was in there for a couple of minutes, then jumped out. He came running out and snuck up behind Wires Woman. Just like his grandpa told him to do, a long, long, time ago, he poked her left arm. POP!!!! Wires Woman started screaming, but only for a couple of seconds because she was slowly starting to evaporate.

“AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA” Everybody started cheering! Wires Woman was gone forever! And it was all thanks to 1 brave hero who stepped up.